Was Attained by Spaulding Class of 1915 in The Varsity Coach."

That acting and stagecraft play an important part in school life would be the opinon of the interested onlooker after having attended the presentation of "The Varsity Coach," as given by the members of the class of 1915 in Spaulding chapel last evening. Before, the largest crowd which has ever been jammed into the once spacious assembly hall was that which turned out to witness the carnest and faithful work of ness the earnest and faithful work of the well-chosen cast of characters who have spent considerable time in perfecting all the infinite details which went to make the presentation a grand success from the start. Few less than 400 found their way into the hall, sitting two in a scat made for one, standing around the halls and seated on chairs placed in the aisles. From expressions overheard as the crowd slowly found their way to the Chief Witness for the Dedoor, it was easily gleaned that all were well satisfied with the performance.

"The Varsity Coach," as the name would infer, takes for its setting the col-lege life of a group of young men. In-terest settles around the most popular of the clique, namely, "Bob" Selby. Mr. Selby makes his mark as an all-round athlete, getting letters, medals, and cups for his splendid showing. While upholding the school in athletics, he finds his But a little love story also centers around Bob and Ruth Moore, a college girl. Having a strong desire for this particular girl, Bob uses her for a weap on to obtain certain notes from the really accomplished student, "Mousie" Kent. This she does quite handily, and the losing scene sees Bob being announced the winner of the much prized scholarship, as well as being elected coach.

The play is full of interesting situaions, and parts are provocative of much laughter. For instance, when Ralph Rogers, as one of the college boys, alias "first-class story teller," gave two of the well-liked "Uncle 'Lisha" stories in the dialect which makes them so interesting. Mr. Rogers received the attention of all and won a loud hand when finished. Then, too, the singing of the college boys was not to be overlooked, for they did very creditably. Each and every one in the cast did his part to perfection, and as entertainers their ability must be rated high.
